"Is Your Business Internet Usage Getting Out of Hand?"

One of the most frustrating problems we hear about on a weekly basis is that of Internet abuse in the workplace. It is widely known that many employees will spend 2 or more hours a day casually surfing the Internet, and in most cases this is a very conservative estimate. As reported by Websense, a typical work environment can cost the typical employer approximately $640 per day in lost productivity due solely to Internet misuse.

One of many available products to filter your Internet traffic on a network level can greatly increase the productivity of your staff. We personally recommend a professional installation of Websense 5.0 EIM, which can be installed in a typical Windows network without the need of additional hardware.

With its flexible structure, you can tune the filter to block an array of different sites and applications, including, but not limited to Instant Messaging and Online Gaming, which are notorious for wasting precious business hours.
